The Kansas Jayhawks held off the Baylor Bears in their NCAA National Championship matchup Wednesday night by a final score of 62-59. Down by two after an early season rout against Baylor, Kansas has made some dramatic changes in hopes of getting back on top this season. Here's a look at some of the top performers from Wednesday's game. Jalen Martin, Senior, Kansas: According to ESPN Stats & Info, Martin's start in the 2014 championship game was his first-ever start in a road championship game. The freshman guard led Kansas with 25 points, with seven of those coming from behind the arc. Shavon Coleman, Sophomore, Kansas: The freshman's 16 points were a career high, shooting just 2-of-8 from the field and 4-of-7 from the free throw line, but he produced a go-ahead bucket with the final seconds of the game at hand. Chris Collins, Senior, Kansas: With his team down by a single point with 12 seconds remaining, Collins threw up a three-pointer that eventually found its way into the basket to put Kansas ahead 59-58. K.J. Lawson, Freshman, Baylor: With Baylor leading by two points with just 9.3 seconds left in the game, Aaron Ross was called for a blocking foul on Cole Conrad on what would have been a game-winning attempt. Lawson knocked down the ensuing layup to send the game into overtime, where Kansas eventually took the win.

What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2022?

Addition of a clickable link to a video makes the video more likely to be shared, according to new research, published this week in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. "The Find a Free Video on YouTube" button sits at the top of YouTube to make it easy for visitors to locate and watch a free, public-domain video. But some videos are "slow" to load or produce the sound of screeching tires—results that have led to millions of irritated YouTube users. A new method could help correct these quality problems for free. "Imagine a recording device that could be placed inside a birdcage and sense the songs that pass through the bars," notes Benjamin Huber, a Ph.D. candidate in the department of bioengineering at the University of California, Santa Barbara. "The device could wirelessly send those sounds back to your laptop computer as a recording." This recording-device-in-a-birdcage metaphor is no exaggeration. Huber has built a prototype of such a system, which uses an ultrasonic sensing technique that transmits and receives sound waves at different frequencies. These particular vibrations carry an image. But just as a picture in a music box can make an ordinary tune sound a little strange, a recording in that birdcage produces sounds that are both murky and distorted. Specifically, the recording presents the behavior of the ultrasonic vibrations from inside the bars as though it were coming from outside. Since the light bouncing off the ultrasonic waves has a wavelength that is much longer than that of the infrared radiation coming from the video, the only way to remove these distortions is to look at the audio image itself. In the new work, Huber shows that he can decode the image simply by measuring the speed at which ultrasonic waves echo back to their source. He then developed a technique for relating this speed to the image itself. When he ran a video of a birdcage with a transmitting device through his ultrasonic scanner, he found the video to be much clearer and more vivid. "The resolution is high enough to be able to make out faces in video," he says. "The spatial resolution is low enough so that you can clearly see the bars on the birdcage when looking at the video directly." The US National Science Foundation supported this work.
