Spectacle lenses are generally divided into two categories. The first category is a hard type, and the second category is a soft type. A hard-type eyewear is formed by a hard material. A hard-type eyewear is usually used in a sport environment, e.g., in a game, in which the use of soft type eyewear tends to be out of question because this would cause problems for the eyes. A hard-type spectacle lens is usually made from hard, light-weight optical glass materials for this reason. A hard-type lens is an optical component with good heat resistance. However, the hardness and light-weight of hard-type lenses also makes it difficult to wear for many years. On the contrary, the spectacles including a hard-type lens can easily withstand the absorption of moisture, and hence, their cosmetic properties can be maintained for many years. A soft-type spectacle lens is generally fabricated using a soft glass material as a material, and is characterized by the relatively low rigidity compared with a hard-type lens. A soft-type lens has a surface on which a plastic of an overcoating layer is formed, and this overcoating layer is an important component that determines the aesthetic appearance of a soft-type lens. Since a soft-type lens is less rigid than a hard-type lens, a soft-type lens is more comfortable to wear than a hard-type lens. Moreover, the use of soft type lenses causes less trouble in the eye than the use of hard type lenses. Therefore, soft-type lenses are widely used in the spectacle lens industry. In recent years, the demand for a hard-type lens has increased in the spectacle lens industry. This trend has been the result of an increase in the user's desire for a spectacle lens that can be used even in a severe environment. A hard-type lens is generally fabricated with a relatively large glass lens thickness that is reduced using an ion exchange method
