Q: What are the benefits of using rake in rails app I have read a lot of posts on this topic, some say its faster others say its to give more test. I am bit confused here, so pls help me out. A: Rails is built on top of the Ruby On Rails framework, which uses what is called MVC architecture. Rake runs small and independent tasks that are a part of an application. What rake does Reads the spec file in app/rake and generates the Rakefile Loads all the task dependencies in the Rakefile Generates the rake task list from the Rakefile Ruby Tutorial Rake Tutorial A: Rake is a build tool and if you have to use it for any purpose then generally it seems slow. Rails is a framework which's job is to speed things up by doing stuff for you. So if you use it then your project is likely to be slow. On the contrary if you use Rake and then write code in a normal way then it would also be slow and there's nothing much your framework could do about it. When you create a project in Rails you create a set of tasks/methods which make the task of deploying/using your app faster.

There is no standard rule about which task is better to use and no standard rule about when to use it so keep it simple, don't use it everywhere and only use it where it's really needed. "The surgeon said he noticed a big red spot on his eye. Then he became very aggressive and aggressive," said the boy's father, who is a volunteer EMT in a local police unit, adding his son's eyes swelled up. He said they took his son to a hospital, and several doctors confirmed they did find a "big red spot" on his eye, but his doctor and several other doctors said they only suspected radiation poisoning and took the boy to Santo Doming
