The goal of the function is to provide a way to load content into the app as the loading indicator changes from 'loading...' to 'done' when the content has been loaded. The loading indicator I'm using right now is simply an iframe. My issue is that when the iframe is ready, I get this error message: TypeError: Cannot read property 'setState' of null const _onStateChange = (state) => { setState(() => { if (state) { if (state.isDone) { return false; } return true; } return false; }); setInterval(_onStateChange, 1000); } I have seen people talk about this error before, but not sure how to fix it. I've tried putting the setState() into another function so that the setInterval will stop once the setState() function is called, but I get the same error. Any ideas? A: You're wrapping setState() in a null check. If you
